NEW BEDFORD

Greater fortunes have been made in the textile business in New Bedford than were ever dreamed of in the day of New Bedford's supremacy as a "Whaling City." And yet New Bedford, like all the other textile centres, feels that there is something wrong in the mill situation. What is it? Read the answer by a manufacturer in the Sunday AMERICAN.

10,000 Wash Dresses for Women Girls & Misses

At 69c, 98c, $1.98, $2.98 and $3.98—Values up to $7.50

And another gigantic purchase by our new buyer. We do not exaggerate when we say "ten thousand." This is not hit or miss estimate nor guesswork. As a matter of fact, we have more than 10,000 Dresses—probably 12,000 at the very least. Certainly twice as many as any other store can show at similar prices and there's not another store in Boston that will show you these styles and qualities at our prices. Our Wagon Dress Sales, since our new buyer took charge, are the sensation of the town. No other sales like them. No such bargains elsewhere.

ON SALE FRIDAY and SATURDAY FORENOON—NOT ON SALE TODAY.

BURBANK HITS U. S. FARMERS

WEST LEBANON, Mo., July 20. The house of Mrs. Wm. H. Vaughan, daughter of the late, the victim, took place today in the home of Mrs. Anne B. Vaughan, where the deceased was born and where she died on the day when the verdict over her murder was rendered at the trial in the Federal Court at St. Louis. The services were conducted by Rev. William F. Brown of the First Congregational Church in Everett, Mass. The funeral service was held at the home of Mrs. Vaughan, where the body was laid out. The service was held at 2:30 p.m. and was attended by a large number of friends. The body was taken to the St. Louis home of Mrs. Vaughan, where it will be laid out until the funeral service is held there.

Desperate Desmond

Copyright, 1911, by the National News Association

Things look dark for Desperate Desmond. He has just been told that the ship he is on is a black night and he is helpless in the path of an overwhelming storm. The matter how sharp a lookout is kept above the ship, it will be impossible for any one to see the vessel in time to save him from a terrible death. Just it seems certain that Desmond must die.

But stay! What is this that the lookout says right ahead of the ship? A light-house? No, he knows there is an light-house within fifty miles, and yet in front of him is a strong glow of light which enables him to see a figure bound in a small boat. With the promptitude of a true sailor, he shouts orders to reverse the engine.

Unconscious as they are in strange slights, the sailors nevertheless are ordered to see a lanterns bottle drifting towards them. One of their number comes forth after the bottle and the distress of Desmond, the latter does not know what to do, but a groan with a guilty conscience always fears that the distress is about to happen.

Advice to the Lovelorn

"I DON'T know what to get this week," said the pretty cook, wiping her face with the corner of her apron.

"How would you like some, cool, cool, cool?" asked the grocer boy. "I'll guarantee them right out of cold storage."

"Oh, get your foolishness," snarled the pretty cook.

"If you'll foolishness, be reasonable," said the grocer boy, tucking his shirt in at the neck. "I'm full of it. I've moved to the cold storage. I know of it. I'll give you all around you."

"I don't want any foolishness," said the pretty cook.

"I've got a line of cold storage," said the grocer boy.

"You've always got sense of some sort," the pretty cook retorted.

Women Are Robbed About Nine Times Out of Ten—Sometimes Oftener

Men That Wouldn't Cheat Each Other, for Some Mysterious Reason, Seem to Take Delight in Cheating Women. Have You Noticed That? The Case of Nellie Bly.

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Company.

As you lie on your dying bed, and with pointing finger address your last few remarks to the wife, mother or daughter that you are leaving behind, you may safely say this:

"Remember that men nearly always cheat women. Remember that the woman who has business relations with men usually ends by losing her money as well as her temper and her faith in human nature."

"Remember that the business man who seems most anxious to be friendly, and who very often starts out with the best of intentions, very frequently ends by robbing women thoroughly."

The sailors of the British ships landing on islands where the penguins lived used to knock the penguins over the head. And now the poor birds are practically destroyed—they are never seen except in the Far North, where men rarely go.

The penguin is the bird that stands up straight, looking like a waiter in his dress suit. The bird is a very silly animal; it stands and waits, blinking its eyes until the sailor with a stick or his bare hands knocks it over and kills it.

The sailor says that it is almost a shame not to kill them, since it is so easy.

Business men apparently say of women that it is almost a shame not to rob them SINCE IT IS SO EASY.

These observations, which are useful and true always, are called forth just now by the case of Mrs. E. C. Seaman, better known as Nellie Bly, the young woman who went around the world in a hurry. Mrs. Seaman has had a good deal to do with business men, and the splendid unanimity with which they robbed her, in sums ranging from a few cents to a hundred thousand dollars at a time, is really impressive.

Mrs. Seaman, like many women, felt that she was called upon to be a great power in business. And she was a good manufacturer. She had one factory to manufacture iron-clad ware. In another factory she made steel barrels, which the Standard Oil bought at big prices. That is not easy to do. She kept her business running all through hard times.

And while she was working at the manufacturing end of the business, while business men were working with all their might and main stealing her money, taking it out of the factory as fast as she could bring it in, and about two million dollars faster.

Now Mrs. Seaman's business is in the hands of a receiver. The District Attorney in Brooklyn, N. Y., working with commendable energy, shows that Nellie Bly has been robbed by employees and others to the tune of more than a million dollars.

One bank in Brooklyn—which it seems needs prompt investigation and a change in its officials if it can't explain matters—has been taking the forged checks of Mrs. Seaman from a saloonkeeper near the factory and cashing them to the tune of hundreds of thousands.

And what is most interesting and surprising, the receivers put in charge of Nellie Bly's affairs appear more anxious to beggar her, and make it impossible for her to carry on her business than to recover from the thieves and from the various banks and trust companies the enormous sums that have been stolen from Nellie Bly, sums that would more than meet all of the company's debts.

Women, before you go into any kind of business, or before you trust any man, no matter how ingenious his expression, how curly his hair, or how deep his interest in you, REMEMBER THAT MEN USUALLY CHEAT WOMEN WHEN THEY GET A CHANCE. IF you don't know that, read about the case of Nellie Bly.

To Train Our Children to Save Trees

The decrease in the number of native song birds has resulted in the elimination of trees from cities and towns. The band purposes to interest the children of Canada and this country in the culture of trees, and in the protection of useful native birds.

"In this way," says Mr. Davey, "we are preparing a more effective plan for the restoration of the forests than could be effected by the setting aside of one hundred forest reservations."

There is no question that the saving of our forests depends on the educating of the future generation to the perils of a treeless land.

Perkinson's Automobile is an Elephant on Their Hands

Congressman McCall and the Initiative and Referendum

Congressman McCall recently declared that if we had the Initiative and Referendum "we should then always have government by the politician and not by the statesman."

Mr. McCall some years ago won great popularity in his strongly anti-imperialistic district by opposing his party's policy to hold the Philippine Islands. Under the cover of that popularity, Mr. McCall has been permitted, without public criticism, to be rather a bad Congressman, judged either by Republican or Democratic standards.

He has proved to be a reactionary, stand-pat Republican of the worst type. During the Roosevelt administration he supported the railroads against President Roosevelt's railroad policy.

Recently he attempted to whitewash former Secretary Ballinger, whose guilt was as clear to those who then investigated it as it is now to those who have been obliged to repudiate Ballinger's acts and confess his guilt.

Mr. McCall is misrepresenting an intelligent district and the poorer a more progressive man takes his place the better for the State and country.

Mr. McCall's absurd opinion that with the Initiative and Referendum we should have a government by a politician and not by a statesman is treated with the scorn it deserves by the Springfield Republican in a recent editorial which we quote:

Representative Samuel W. McCall makes caustic sport of the Initiative and referendum. "We should then always have government by the politician and not by the statesman," he says. We must now according to him have government by statesmen, and here is a picture of the results as drawn by F. J. Stimson of Boston in his latest book, "Popular Law-Making"—or rather law-making under the aegis of selected representatives which Mr. McCall would accept as a finality:

"All those doing business under a corporate form primarily, but also those doing business at all all owners of property, all employers of labor, all bankers or manufacturers or consumers; all citizens in their private and their social relations, must look into their newspaper every morning to make sure that the whole of life has not been changed for them by a statute passed over night; when no one any lawyer may maintain an office without the most recent day-by-day bulletins on legislation; but may not advise on the simplest provision of the marriage or divorce of a wife's share in her husband's property, or her freedom of contract, without sending not only to his own Legislature, but for the most recent statute or any other State which may have a bearing on the situation."

As against this place the Oregon popular referendum under which, at the last application, a score or more of measures were offered for adoption and nearly all of them voted down.

Here again is the selected statesmanship of Massachusetts sitting through more than half the year that the wheels of the law-mill may be kept going as perpetually as possible—voting time larger salaries in assurance that the volume of new legislation will be made larger, and drawing from the Governor, quite properly, doubt, as many as six vetoes a day. At the same time we read that Governor Dix of New York still keeps busily at work turning out vetoes of what the Harvard Times calls "half-baked" legislation which the selected statesmanship of that Commonwealth is so eager to adopt that it sits beyond the selected terms and works for nothing. And so it goes through most of the States all over the country.

This, you see, is government by statesmen as against government by politicians. We are to have government by politicians only when the power of direct review of legislation by selected statesmen is given to the people. So runs the logic of Mr. McCall. Meantime, may he be pleased to tell us what proportion of this mighty volume of new legislation from a selected statesmanship is really wanted by the people or what proportion he thinks the people should have whether they want it or not; and what proportion is the work of several interests laboring more or less in the dark among the selected statesmen away from their homes and out of touch with their constituents, and in such limited numbers as greatly to lighten and cheapen the task of winning the legislative favor for these interests? It is hardly possible under the plan of the referendum power that we can get a worse or more voluminous outpouring of yearly law-making. We may get something better.

Brandeis on Muckraking

The editor of the International Magazine asked Louis D. Brandeis what he thought of journalistic muckraking. Here is Mr. Brandeis's reply:

It is the function of the press to diagnose our social ills. We must know the truth, and only the truth can set us free. To this end any and every exposure must be preceded by a thorough and intelligent investigation and the facts ascertained must be presented with a view to disseminating the information thus obtained. Of course the presentation must be skillful and interesting. If the investigation is thorough, the presentation skillful, and the purpose to secure a remedy, there is probably no social ill which cannot be profitably treated.

LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

Praise for Letters to Ireland

The following kind and graceful letter, written by a leading South Boston physician to Mr. Galvin, the AMERICAN's special commissioner to Ireland, is of more than personal interest:

Dear Mr. Galvin:—As "the kindly word unspoken is a sin," allow me to say how much I am enjoying your Sunday letters from Ireland. I have not only read them carefully, but have presented them. Though today's letter and its main topic Free Trade or Protection, it cannot but interest the specialists on Ireland, for the subject is of universal interest. I congratulate you on the good, solid work you have done on a trip so rapid and that must have thrilled your nerves, renewing old acquaintances with places and people. Your letters must make not a few steady readers of the Sunday AMERICAN. Wishing you may soon enjoy the privilege of reporting the reopening of the Irish Parliament and that I may meet you then in Dublin, I am, yours, very sincerely, South Boston.
